Roster of Three Highland County Com panies in the 24 Battalion Ohio National Guard-The Official Documents.

Adjutant General Axline, while re cently rummaging over and arranging the old files and papers in the storage room of his department, found quite a number of undelivered National Guard discharge storm, among these there is sued to the Second Battalion Independent Cavalry, Ohio National Guard. This organization was located in Highland county, and was organized in July, 1863, and mustered out of the State service May 1, 1866. Believing that, as these were Highland county companies, these papers would be highly prized as trophies of war times by the persons to whom they belong, we have had a list carefully prepared by General Axline, who states that the certificates of discharge will be sent to their proper owners on application to the Adjutant General's office.

Attorney General Kohler on the Dow Law.

It seems that there has been a misun derstanding and a misconstruction of the opinion given by Attorney General Kohler in relation to the rights of distillers to appoint agents to sell their liquors in places where incorporated towns and villages had passed an ordinance under the provisions of the Dow law to prohibit the traffic therein. Upor this question the Attorney General says: "I stated that a manufacturer can sell through his lawful agent, in the regular course of business (for instance, a drummer or traveling man) in any part of the State, but that where a place of business or establishment is opened by a so-called agent, who received intoxicating liquor from the manufacturer, and he, the agent, then sold it by the gallon, that in such cases the special tax would have to be paid; that such a so-called agency could not be set up to evade the law.

"Upon the question of the effect of a prohibitory ordinance under the local option feature, I have advised where my opinion has been asked that such an agency to sell beer by the gallon would be in violation of the law. In short, that section 8, allowing manufacturers to sell, would not cover the case of such an agency in any place where an ordinance of prohibition has been adopted. These opinions are duly recorded in my office, and I refer to them here simply because there seems to be an impression that the construction has been otherwise."

Master Melvin Garrettson, of the publie schools, in Hillsboro, is a real prodigy in Mathematics. He is eleven years of age and has advanced in his studies as far as the third reader, and only a few weeks ago it was observed by his teacher that he possessed remarkable powers in his ready ability to add long columns of figures. He could add numerous' columns so quickly that it made "all the boys look around at me, and my teacher would get red in the face," to use his own expression. He possesses no more than ordinary ability in multiplication, subtraction or division. The only explanation given for this extrac ability in the little fellow is that he has a genius in that line .- Sabina News, Christ and the Pisher Boy.

'Tis eye, and o'er the distant hills The sun in glory sinks to rest, Now clouds and darkness gather o'er The far and ever-changing West.

The white-capped billows rush and roll On Galilee's storm-driven sea ; Wild winds and waves in conflict dire Join in one long, mad revelry,

Along that dark and lonely shore The Savior walked with weary feet, And whispered to his own and heart : "Must I this cruel ordeal meet?"

A fisher boy in passing saw The Stranger walking near the sea, And paused; with anxious voice he said:
"It storms; wilt thou not go with me?" The Savior turned and made reply :

"The storm doth not disturb my breast Nor this dark, sad and lonely hour : I'm weary waiting, I would rest. Waiting for that eventful hour Which fills my heart, my soul, my brain, When I shall meet the monster Death And feel his cruel darts of pain."

While talking thus a strange bright bird From o'er the sea, storm-driven, fled, And falling at the Master's feet, Struggled a moment, and was dead

"Poor bird", the boy in pity said, Thou fled afar thy life to save, But on this stormy, sea-washed shore Have found at last a lonely grave."

The savior took the poor dead bird Within his warm and loving hands, And from its plumage, rich and rare, Brushed the wet and clinging and. Then gently breathed upon the bird

"Live thou again, sweet bird", said He. "From out that deep, mysterious bourne I call thy life again to thee." The bird then slowly raised its head,

Stretching its pinions bright and strong, And perching on the Savier's hand, Poured forth a sweet and grateful song. The boy a moment silent stood, Then bowed his head in voiceless prayer;

And thus they prayed together there. "Art thou a prophet sent from God To call His people back to Him?"
"I am the Savior", Christ replied, "Saving His people from their sin."

The Savior clasped him in his arms,

They nailed the Savior on the tree. fisher boy cried out and said : "He's Christ, the Savier, unto me." JOHN W. KLISE.

Smith, the Cock-Fighter. "John Smith" appeared numerously in the Police Court yesterday. He was a merchant, a clerk, a broker, as well as loafer, a ward politician and a bummer. He attended a chicken fight, and was collectively arrested for breaking the law. When the high-tone merchant and clerk and the habitual loafer and bummer get so low down as to patronize chicken fights, they all reach the same level, and before the world want to sesume the indefinite name of "John Smith." If Brown, of the honorable mercantile house of Brown & Co., of his own volition, attends chicken fights and associates with chicken sports and thinks he is performing the duties of a highminded citizen, it would hardly be expected that Jones, the ward bummer and tough, would have any more elevated ideas of his duties of citizenship.— Times-

The members of the Daniel Rose Post, G. A. R., had been looking forward with bright anticipations to the 6th of February. Their ardor was not dampened by the bad weather, and they made all necessary preparations for a gala day. The Post bought a sufficient number of tin plates and spoons to set a table the length of the hall, also tins for coffee, and the leadies cooked more than a bushel of beans. The meal was an enjoyable one, and beans, pork, "hard tack," and coffee miraculously disappeared (though not all the beans), and they were esten with more apparent satisfaction than the richest viands. At the auction in the afternoon the crowd was not large, as the weather had become so disagreeable. The articles for sale were cried by "Happy Bert Largan," a ventriloquist, who happened along just at the right time to do the boys good service. He made some happy hits and disposed of everything on hand in a short time. The proceeds from the auction were over $40. The oyster supper, combined with cake and fruit, in the evening, under the auspices of the ladies of the Spring, in spite of the weather, was a complete success. The tables were filled all evening with gay parties of ladies and gentlemen. The arrangements worked together like clock work, and everything went off as merrily as a marriage bell. The affair meted out to the Post financially about $75, and they will clear about $60. The Post would gratefully acknowledge their indebtedness to friends in Hillsboro for their timely aid; and also return thanks to the neighboring country folk and citizens of the village for their generous help, and render their tribute of praise and thanks to the ladies of the village, without whose ready assistance their designs could not have been brought to successful completion.

Church in this place. Conversions and accessions were numerous.

Mr. Joseph D. Wilson and Miss Myrtle M. Ferneau were married on Wednesday evening, Feb. 2d, at half pass six o'clock, at "Valley Home," the handsome residence of Joseph Ferneau, by Rev. S. F. Sharpless, the accomplished minister of the Presbyterian Church of Bainbridge. The company was not large, only a few of the most intimate friends having received invitations. Fred Smith and his sister Mattie were in attendance as groomsman and bridesmaid. Immediately following the ceremony the company repaired to the dining hall, where an elaborate supper was prepared, which to express it in a mild way, was enjoyed by all. After the repast the bride and groom received congratulations, and then followed the presents, many of which were costly and magnificent. The amusements of the evening were appropriate and enjoyable. The receptions magnificent. The amusements of the evening were appropriate and enjoyable. The reception at knos Wilson's, the groom's father, on Thursday, was a very delightful affair, and will long be remembered by all present. Your correspondent returns thanks for a bountiful supply of cake.
